WORKING HARD FOR CONVENTION

State Odd Fellows Convention for Next Year Object of Vigorous Campaign now being Carried on by Town Representatives.

If Gettysburg fails to secure the state convention of Odd Fellows for next year it will not be the fault of the two representatives of the town now working at Reading to secure a decision for this place for the 1913 meeting.

Robert C. Miller, representing the Board of Trade, and E. E. Slaybaugh, representing Gettysburg Lodge 124, went to the Reading convention on Monday morning and at once started to work among the hundreds of delegates who arrived during the day. They took with them a thousand or more badges bearing the inscription "Why not Gettysburg?" These they pinned on the coat lapels of as many delegates as would wear them and it was not many hours before a goodly number could be seen advertising this place.

Tuesday still more of these were put out and hundreds were wearing the little flags by noon. Mr. Miller and Mr. Slaybaugh found ready assistance in the contest for the Gettysburg selection in other Odd Fellows from the southern part of the state and these spread the idea rapidly. A thousand booklets advertising Gettysburg and containing an invitation to come here were put out and helped along the cause.

The most active opposition came from Stroudsburg which used the Delaware Water Gap as a drawing card and urged the selection of that town strongly upon the delegates.

should not be allowed to vote. The winning team received a prize of $36

HUNT NEWMAN IN WAYNESBORO

Negro who Shot at Chief Shealer being Hunted in Franklin County Town where he is Wanted for Another Offense.

A message from the Waynesboro police this afternoon stated that extra efforts are being put forth there to apprehend Edward Newman, colored, who would in all probability have killed or at least seriously injured
Chief of Police Shealer Saturday night had not his revolver failed him twice.

Newman is well known in Waynesboro where he is wanted in connection with some charge growing out of a fight. He had been living there previously to his appearance in Gettysburg and just as soon as the Waynesboro police heard of his offense here they went to his former residence to search for him. He was not there, however.

Friends of Newman here and in Waynesboro are being closely watched and it is not thought he will do much work in either place before he will be apprehended.

Newman's wounds which he secured in trying to get away from Officer Shealer will serve as a ready identification for police in other towns and it is hoped that his capture will not be a matter for many days' wait.

QUARTER MILLION YOUNG TREES

Forester Robert G. Conklin on the Caledonia state reserve is having the busiest of busy days now. Already this spring he has sent out from the Caledonia nursery about ten thousand seedlings. Of these 7,000 three-year white pines were used in three experimental lots on the Caledonia reserve and 2,700 white pines, four years old, were shipped to various state forest service supervision.

There was something of a resemblance Tuesday at the Caledonia hills nursery to field work in Germany as a number of sunbonneted young girls, trim and clean, were engaged therein.
They were occupied in transplanting from seedbeds to transplant beds about 250,000 year old seedlings. These are made up of white pines, Scotch pines, Norway spruces and European larches.
Passers by along the Chambersburg and Gettysburg turnpike frequently stopped at points near the Graeffen-burg inn to watch this somewhat picturesque labor.

PEPPER WEEDS

The pepper weed, which has been in this section of Adams county for three years has grown to be an evil that threatens to do much damage to crops. It is growing in large quantities among the clover in fields. It also grows in the wheat and as it ripens bed of that grain, it scatters its seeds in the ground before it can be cut. It resembles the wild carrot.

The Canada thistle is also becoming a menace again. Because of the scarcity of hay hereabouts the past year, a lot of hay was shipped in from Canada and with it came a lot of the seeds of the thistle. All fields fertilized from stables that fed this hay have Canada thistle springing up in them and there will be great loss to farmers.

Some time ago the Canada thistle was plenty hereabouts but was practically exterminated.

WORK FOR YOUNG MEN

The State Young Men's Christian Association of Pennsylvania is pursuing an admirable plan by which young men in towns and villages without associations may be accorded some of the advantages of the organization. The state committee is appointing in these places a representative, known as a corresponding member. His chief duty is to keep the state office informed when any young man leaves to settle elsewhere for any purpose whatever. The state committee forwards this information to the association of the place in which the young man is to locate. He is met cordially and helped in finding a congenial home, in securing employment, and is introduced to the helpful influences and Christian fellowship of his new environment.

The state committee has recently appointed E. G. Lower, as corresponding member for Tabie Rock. He will gladly give any aid or information about work for young men that may be in his power.

COL. ROOSEVELT SWEEPS OHIO

Carries the State Over Taft By a 2 to 1 Vote.

GOV. WILSON ALSO WINS

President Has Carried Only Two Districts in Hamilton County, His Home.

Columbus, O., May 22.—Roosevelt has swept Ohio by a 2 to 1 vote, according to returns. Unless later reports show decided changes, the only delegates which President Taft will have will be from the two districts in Hamilton county, his home, where the Roosevelt people made no fight.

Roosevelt will carry Toledo by about 300. He will carry the Ninth district by about 1500. This will give Roosevelt 38 out of the 42 Ohio delegates.

In the Democratic contest Wilson will carry the state over Governor Harmon. He will carry Toledo and the Ninth district by 3000. Wilson carried Hamilton county, Harmon's home, by about 1000.

So overwhelming is the lead of Col. Roosevelt that it is likely he will not only carry the nineteen districts outside of Hamilton county, but also control the state convention, which is independently elected to the county conventions. His friends will dictate the six delegates-at-large.

The Taft people centered their fight upon getting this control, for the convention will adopt a platform and in strict six delegates-at-large to the Chicago convention.

Roosevelt has carried Cleveland by more than 2 to 1 over Taft. He also carried Columbus and Toledo.

A cold wet spring has put the farmers weeks behind in their spring work and put them in a position where they had to take advantage of every fine day. Consequently they remained in the fields at work rather than driving to voting places.

In most of the cities watchers declared that Republican voters outnumbered the Democrats. In Columbus the proportion was as high as 4 to 1.

This was caused, it was said, by the unusual interest in the fight for the Republican presidential nomination and the unprecedented speaking tours just completed by President Taft and Colonel Roosevelt.

GARY MAKES A DENIAL

Says Neither He Nor the Steel Trust is Aiding T. R. Financially.

New York, May 22.—Former Judge E. H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, in a statement issued, denied the statement made by Senator LaFollette to the effect that Judge Gary had contributed to the Roosevelt campaign fund.

"Neither I nor the Steel corporation," said Judge Gary, "has contributed, is contributing or has been asked to contribute anything to the Roosevelt campaign."

AFTER RECKLESS AUTOISTS

Chauffeur Who Ran Down Girl in Chicago Fined $1000.

Chicago, May 22.—A chain of automobile accidents in the last week, unprecedented in the history of Chicago, has caused city and county officers to declare that they will take drastic measures to stop reckless driving.

Municipal Judge Gemmell started an active crusade against "speeders" by fining George S. Scott, who was driving an automobile that struck and injured Anna Flakenberg, fourteen years old, $1000.

The charge was assault with a deadly weapon, a new ground for the prosecution of automobile drivers. County Prosecutor Wayman declared his intention to take personal charge of all automobile accident cases that reach his office. He declared himself in favor of an amendment to the state law on speeding, making it a criminal offense.

Mayor Harrison in a message to the city council urged a revision of the city ordinances regulating the speed of machines. He followed this with a letter to Municipal Judge Olson, protesting against the release of speeders by the city courts after merely nominal fines had been imposed.

GENTLEMAN BURGLAR MADE RICH HAULS

Jewelry Worth $20,000 in Safe Deposit Vault.

New York, May 22.—Jewelry valued at several thousand dollars, the police say about $20,000, was found in a safe deposit vault in the Colonial bank.

The safe deposit box had been engaged during the latter part of February by Bert Curtis, who was arrested on Saturday night as he emerged from the jewelry store of Gottlieb Glander, at 84 Lenox avenue.

Curtis was arraigned in the Harlem police court and held in $5000 bail for the grand jury on charges of burglary and having burglar's tools in his possession. The magistrate asked him if he would not give an order to the bank people to examine the vault, whereupon he volunteered to go himself in company with detectives.

"Curtis hardly looks the part of the 'gentleman burglar,'" as the police have styled him. In looking through the man's record the police have found that in 1907, when Curtis was nabbed for a job at the school of the Misses Lockwood in Scarsdale, N. Y., he had adopted the same methods as he is alleged to have used in the recent robbery attributed to him. On that occasion he gained admittance to the school because of his good clothes and natty appearance. He got away with several thousand dollars' worth of jewelry. He was sentenced to Sing Sing for six years and six months for that and was released on Oct. 2, 1911.

HIS SISTER HIS WIFE

Three Children the Result of Unlawful Cohabitation For Ten Years.

Hackensack, N. J., May 22.—One of the most astounding cases in the history of the Hackensack jail was recorded when Frank Mokai, thirty-eight years old, of Little Ferry, was committed by Justice Rohl, charged with unlawful cohabitation with his sister, Barbara, aged twenty-eight.

The couple have lived in this manner for ten years and have three children. They are Bohemians. The prisoner is a carpenter and commuted to and from New York every day. His sister is at present in a delicate condition.

County Physician Armstrong said that the medical profession would not doubt be much interested in the mentality of the offspring from such a source.

BAER DENIES SEEING ARCHBALD

Was Not Approached in Culp Bank Deals.

ANOTHER NOTE IN CASE

W. J. Richards, Vice President of Reading Coal Company, Was Visited by Judge and Refused Lease.

Washington, May 22.—George F. Baer, president of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway company, testified in the house inquiry into charges against Judge Robert W. Archbald, of the commerce court.

He said the railroad company was not connected with the Philadelphia & Reading Coal and Iron company, of which he is also president. The policy of the company, he said, was not to lease its culm banks.

The examination of Mr. Baer was brief. He denied having any conversation with Judge Archbald in regard to a culm property.

"Did Judge Archbald, to your knowledge, intercede with you or your company to lease a culm bank to Fred Warneke, of Scranton?" asked the chairman, Mr. Clayton. "Not with me."

W. J. Richards, vice president of the same coal company, testified that on Nov. 26 or 27, 1911, Judge Archbald called on him at Pottsville and asked for the situation in regard to the proposed Warneke lease. "I told him the matter had been considered and was practically closed, and that the culm bank would not be leased," said Mr. Richards.

A letter written from Scranton by Judge Archbald, arranging the interview, was read. It was written on a letterhead of the commerce court.

Mr. Richards was asked if his brother was offered $5000 to get him to change his mind, so Warneke could get the lease. "My brother had nothing to do with it. Warneke wrote him about three years ago to use his influence with me."

H. C. Reynolds, of Scranton, an attorney, testified that last February or March he was talking with John T. Lenahan, former congressman, about Judge Archbald, and expressed the opinion that he did not see much in the report about an attempt to have C. G. Boland discount the $500 note indorsed by Judge Archbald about the time Boland had a case before the Judge. Reynolds quoted Lenahan as having said: "What would you think if I told you that about the time we had the old Plymouth Coal company case in the federal courts, Mr. Risinger, of the company, came to me and asked me to discount a note for $2500, in which Judge Archbald was interested?"

W. W. Rissinger, of Scranton, Pa., a mine operator, testified that in 1908 a promoter named Hamilton came to him with a gold placer concession in Honduras.

He took the matter up with Judge Archbald, who said "the proposition looked good."

Mr. Rissinger said he, Judge Archbald and the former's mother-in-law, signed a $2500 note to raise money to go into the concession. The witness said the note was still unpaid, but was discounted by a Scranton bank; several times, he said, it had been renewed.

Mr. Rissinger declared he could not remember having asked Mr. Lenahan or his bank in Wilkes-Barre to discount the note. "I got the note discounted at the bank I usually do business with," he said. "My recollection is indistinct."

"Did Judge Archbald know you were going to discount the note?" "Yes, I think so."

"Did he suggest who would discount it?" "No."

The witness said Judge Archbald got no money from the note, but stocks in the Honduras deal. Under cross examination, Mr. Rissinger said the Old Plymouth Coal company case was settled Nov. 19, 1908, and final judgment rendered by Judge Archbald on Nov. 23, 1908. The note was dated Dec. 12, 1908.

WILL KEEP THE WATER HOT

Cover for Jug Adds Much to the Comfort of the Shaver in the Early Morning.

A cover for the jug that contains the hot water for shaving purposes is always a useful article, but now that the cold weather is with us, it is more than ever essential. We give, therefore, a sketch of a handy cover, that can be slipped over the jug after it has been filled, and that leaves the handle free, so that the jug may be easily carried with the cover upon it. Blanketing is perhaps the best material to select to make it in, but any thick woolen fabric may be used.

For the upper part of the cover two circular pieces rather larger than the top of the jug should be cut out and sewn together, and between these two pieces either a stiff piece of cardboard or a piece of tin should be sewn in to stiffen them. The steam from the hot water will in time soften card.

board, so that tin should be used for preference, and a piece cut from the top of a meat tin will answer the purpose. To this, the remaining part of the cover is easily attached, and a slit left upon one side for the handle. For appearance sake the seam round the top may be edged with cord, and a loop of tape should be sewn on where indicated for removing the cosy from the jug, and the words "Shaving Water" can be worked in colored wool upon one side.

A double thickness of material should be used throughout, and the base and the slit for the handle bound at the edges with braid chosen of the same color as wool and cord.

LINGERIE OF THE DAINTIEST

Woman of Fashion Insists on the Lightest Fabrics and Most Exquisite Embroidery.

Open work wheel embroidery so oft repeated that little of the background was to be seen is one of the favorite embellishments of a double set of underwear made for a coming trousseau. Two other sets of finest cambric are embroidered with little cupids and doves supporting a rope of roses, all rendered in the finest embroidery. A third set has Malines lace insert upon it, and the fine Irish crochet and Valenciennes decorate a fourth.

For some of the little matinee jackets finely plaited chiffon flounces are chosen as an edging and others have scalloped ones oversewn with wool, which looks cozy and of an uncommon appearance upon wool backed satin. Completely charming are the coverlets sold to be thrown over the lingerie sets when put out by the lady's maid for morning or evening wear, each one among them a match to the lingerie.

The slips and blouses from the lingerie department of a well-known maker of such frivolities are like gossamer for lightness of weight and show the simplicity of line and design that is absolutely delightful when the finest fabrics are used. There is a petal pink crepe blouse with a collar and a straight yoke of black Chantilly lace, to which decoration is added a little breast pocket trimmed with a fan of Chantilly. Another of the three layer kind, the first of finest sand colored chiffon and the third of palest blue, with a sandwich between of "age yellow" lace.

Chinese Sewing Bag.

As today is a day of fancy stitchery, of knitting, of crochet and of embroidery among women who are busy and women who are at leisure, workbags are very important. Hundreds of them are being made for gifts, but the newest idea is the bag of heavy Chinese mandarin embroidery, the top of which is run through a jade bracelet and the sides of which are trimmed with those funny little Chinese ornaments in green wood and beads that are put on the lanterns and can be bought at the Oriental shops.

White Blouses Revived.

It seems essential to wear some touch of black at the neck of a white blouse these days, and the fashion will be followed out in America without doubt. More than white blouses are sold than for the last four years, because they have returned to favor with morning suits, provided they are quite plain and very sheer. The only trimming allowed is a narrow band of Irish insertion down the front and at the collar and on edge of Irish Picot on the frills over the hand and down the front.

For Hanging Out Clothes.

When hanging out clothes in the bright sunlight, and especially when there is snow on the ground, I find dark glasses, such as can be purchased at the five-and-ten-cent stores almost indispensable. — The House-keeper.

HOME TOWN HELPS

TAKES DELIGHT IN GARDENS

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, One of Those Who Seemingly Charm the Flowers to Grow.

There are few authors who follow their pet hobby so assiduously as does Frances Hodgson Burnett; and her hobby is gardening. Her present home at Plantmore, near Manassas, L. I., is a marvel of experimentation in gardening.

She seems to have the ability to coax the most reluctant flower out of the ground. When a new seedling catalogue arrives, other household affairs quite cease—such as reading, writing, books, eating and talking shop—until the catalogue has been criss-crossed with approving marks. And table conversation is likely to center about the gardens, as a yachtsman's centers about storms and rigging.

But her present garden is nothing as compared with the rare old gardens Mrs. Burnett once had at her beautiful old manor house, Maytham Hall, in England. She made the most beautiful garden in all Kent—a county noted for gardens.

Back of the mansion stretched old brick walls, showing traces of masonry dating as far back as 1000 A. D. Some of the walls were so old that great cedars grew atop of them. Some were tumbled down, gray, with exquisite tracery of lichens. Among these quite old walls stretched many gardens.

The most interesting had once been an apple orchard. The trees had rotted away and the plot became a tangled, wild back of the beyond. Here, decided Mrs. Burnett, she would have a rose garden in which to write. She planted roses, not merely in a few formal beds, but in masses, climbing roses and low shrubs, making one great blaze of color.

WIDTH OF COUNTRY ROADS

Los Angeles Times Shows How Imperative Some System of Uniformity Has Become.

Some uniform width of country roads should be established and strictly adhered to on each road running from the city to sea, or to the outer boundaries of the county. It appears that some roads on our present good roads system vary from 40 to 100 feet. The first figure is as much too small as the latter is too large. It is indeed unfortunate that 70 or 80 feet is not the official width and the overhanging portion sold and the proceeds used to buy land to bring the minimum up to the standard. Now that we have a County Board of Forestry they should be planting our chief highways, but where shall trees be placed on a roadway varying in width from 40 to 100 feet? If long, graceful curves marked the transition from the width to another the problem would easily be solved, but "jogs," never!—Los Angeles Times.

England's Oldest Newspaper.

Besides being the government's best journalistic property, the London Gazette is also the oldest existing English newspaper. It published its first number in 1665. In that troubled year the court was at Oxford on account of the plague and the paper bore the name of the Oxford Gazette in consequence, not changing to its present title until the twenty-fourth number. We can get some idea of the cost of running it from the statement of one of its rivals that the rival's charge for "entertaining spies for information" was $2,500 in the first year.

PLAN TO POSTPONE VOTE ON LORIMER

Senator Reported Ill at His Home in Illinois.

Washington, May 22.—Amid speculation in the senate regarding the probable disposition of the Lorimer election case, there were reports of plans for a determined effort to postpone the vote until the next session of congress.

Such a move would be warmly fought by anti-Lorimer senators. A probable delay, for a time at least, was foreshadowed by developments growing out of Senator Lorimer's illness in Chicago. He telegraphed an appeal for the determination of a date for a vote deferred until he could reach Washington, coupling that with the statement that his physician would not agree to his leaving home at this time.

Senator Lorimer is recovering from combined grippe and bronchitis, with a heart irregularity that has aroused some concern among his friends. His physician Dr. S. R. Slaymaker, has told some of the senator's friends that Mr. Lorimer might be able to leave his home within a month.

NO TOLL FOR U. S. SHIPS

American Vessels to Use Canal Free of Charge.

Washington, May 22.—By the close vote of 100 to 90, the house refused to permit the imposition of tolls on American vessels engaged in the coastwise trade and which will use the Panama canal.

The action was taken during consideration of the Panama canal administration bill. Representative Adamson, of Georgia, in charge of the measure, expressed confidence that the house would reverse itself Thursday when the bill is taken up for passage and would vote for the imposition of toll charges on all vessels, irrespective of the flag they flew.

RICHESON DIED IN CHAIR TALKING

Current Turned on as He Says "I Am Willing to Die."

HIS BRAIN IS NORMAL

Circumstances Arise Which May Prevent His Burial Beside Mother in Virginia.

Boston, May 22.—Clarence V. T. Richeson, former Baptist clergyman and confessed poisoner of Miss Avis Linnell, of Hyannis, electrocuted on Tuesday, is the first man who ever talked after taking his seat in the electric chair.

This statement was made by Dr. Joseph I. McLaughlin, physician at the Charlestown state prison.

Richeson, after calmly walking to the execution chamber, answered seven questions put to him by Rev. Herbert S. Johnson, his spiritual adviser.

Rev. Johnson issued a statement explaining that the seven questions were asked the condemned man as he was being strapped in the chair for the purpose of taking Richeson's mind off his ordeal and to meet Richeson's wish to leave some religious testimony for the witnesses.

Rev. Johnson's statement in part was as follows:

"The warden said that he wished I could make the man talk from the death chair, as that would take his thoughts off himself and his passing could occur without a period of distressing suspense. The warden explained to me how he would give the signal for the application of the current when the man's breath was exhaled. He also requested me, so far as possible, before the execution to keep Richeson from talking about it and to keep his mind engaged with other things.

"Chaplain Stebbins and I then agreed that we should induce Richeson to leave some kind of a religious testimony for the witnesses to the execution, and this plan appeared to Richeson. He had wished that he might do something before he died. Warden Bridges said that he would give the signal to the electrician while Richeson was making his reply.

"We thought that probably he would be strapped in the chair so quickly that only two or three questions would be necessary. Although the work of placing the man in the chair was done speedily, yet it took longer than I had estimated, and consequently I had to ask more questions. These questions were extemporaneous.

"Finally came the question 'Are you willing to live or to die for Jesus sake?' and his answer 'I am willing to live or to die' were the last words that he spoke, as the signal was given and his life passed out."

The body of Richeson lay at the North Grove street morgue. Dr. George B. McGrath, medical examiner of Suffolk county, performed the autopsy required by law, and declared that Richeson's brain was normal.

Douglas Richeson, of Chicago, the dead man's brother, was undecided regarding the disposition of the remains. It was the understanding, previous to the execution, that the body would be taken to Richeson's boyhood home in Virginia for burial, but circumstances arose which prevented the plan from being carried out.

Richeson left no will, but in conversation with Mr. Johnson and William A. Morse, his counsel, during the hours preceding his death, he gave directions as to the disposition of his personal effects. His library Richeson left to clerical friends.

POURED ACID IN EYE

Sight of Actor Destroyed by Mistake on Stage.

Camden, N. J., May 22.—Chester Devonde, an actor, is in the Cooper hospital here with one eye so burned that it will never be of use again, and with the doctors striving to prevent the trouble extending to the other eye.

Some one substituted a powerful carbolic solution for a bottle of water which was in use as one of the properties of the play, "The Great Medical Mystery," at the Temple theater. Paul Webster, playing the physician to Devonde's lead, in the second act has to pour potent drops into the eyes of the hero. In some manner the property bottle of water became mixed with another, and the strong antiseptic solution was poured into the eye.

Kicked to Death by Horse.

York, Pa., May 22.—The body of E. D. Kellogg, of Quakertown, Berks county, was found in a stable here. A horse was tied nearby, and it is believed the man was kicked to death. There is also a rumor that Kellogg is the victim of foul play, and Coroner B. W. Shirley is conducting an investigation.

Italian Arrested For Murder.

Williamsport, Pa., May 22.—Rafaelo Meralo is under arrest here, charged with luring Dominico Tambosco into the woods near Corning, N. Y., and killing and robbing him. Tambosco disappeared Feb. 15. He was last seen with Meralo, who left Corning a day or two later. On Sunday Tambosco's body was found.

Nevertheless, Occasionally a man makes a mistake which proves to be fortunate and profitable. Nevertheless, it is not a good plan to go about making mistakes.

BALL PLAYERS FINED $100 EACH

No Action on Ty Cobb, Who Remains Suspended.

Philadelphia, May 22.—The eighteen members of the Detroit base ball club who struck on Saturday because of the suspension of "Ty" Cobb, their star center fielder, were fined $100 each by President Ban B. Johnson, of the American league, and representatives of the eight clubs in the circuit.

This fine represents $50 for each unplayed game, the regulation penalty for insubordination and a refusal to play.

The session touched upon the case of "Ty" Cobb, who attacked a spectator in a game at New York last Wednesday, only in a general way. The investigation and settlement of the Cobb affair was left in the hands of President Johnson, who will take the matter up in New York.

The conference further considered rowdiness among spectators at ball games and decided that in the future jurisdiction in this should be taken out of the hands of the umpire and the responsibility for the good behavior of the spectators be up to the club owners and the police.

Mr. Johnson, while he did not actually say so, intimated that he would deal as lightly with Cobb as possible under the circumstances. The trend of his talk was that he had no wish or intention of being unduly hard upon the player.

Amateur, Who Has Just Bought Machine, Tries Flight Alone.

Xenia, O., May 22.—Fred J. Southard, of Minneapolis, Minn., an amateur aviator, fell 100 feet at the Wright aviation field near Osborn and was instantly killed.

Southard, who was forty years old, had just bought the airplane from the Wright brothers. He obtained tickets to the hangar, after he had been refused permission to take the airplane out without further experience. He fell just six minutes after he had begun the first flight alone. His body was badly crushed.

CHAPTER VI.

The Third Degree.

Police Headquarters—the old headquarters of Mulberry Street—was one of the architectural monstrosities of New York. Fronting Mulberry Street, its faded brick walls presented a forbidding aspect to the ancient, tumbledown rookeries across the way. Its rear walls faced Mott Street, harmonizing with the squalid tenements of that narrow, ill-smelling thoroughfare. It was a type of public building now happily obsolete, which an awakened artistic sense is rapidly relegating to the scrap heap. Its rigid lines were a monotony of ugliness, unrelieved by column or capital. One viewed its hideous bulk with a shuddering sense of apprehension, almost expecting to see it crumble on the unfortunates penned within.

Visitors to the Detective Bureau entered a dingy room, approached by a narrow hall, on the Mott Street side of the building. Its most conspicuous furnishings were several brass rails which crossed one another in bewildering fashion. Half-open doors led boldly into other offices, as if to dispel the atmosphere of secrecy that hovered perpetually over the place. Two uniformed lieutenants of police were constantly on guard at oaken desks backed against opposite walls. On the morning following the Missioner diamond robbery, the two guardians were busy sorting piles of documents scattered on their desks.

"Guess it's time for the line-up," remarked one of the lieutenants.

He entered the adjoining room, a large, square chamber, in which the rays from clusters of electric bulbs mingled with the pale, shivery light of the sun.

"Here's the list," he called to the desk lieutenant, at the same time throwing a bundle of documents to him.

Massed against the opposite wall in listless attitudes were fifty or sixty detectives, their faces covered by long masks. They shifted about uneasily while waiting for the hapless prisoners captured the night before to be lined up for inspection. This daily spectacle, terrifying to the innocent suspects, amusing to the old-time lawbreakers, marks the beginning of the morning's routine of the men detailed to prevent crime and hunt down criminals. Not a pleasing exhibition, but a necessary one. For the opportunity must be provided for the detectives to become familiar with the countenances of the lawbreakers. And by the simple device of the masks, the hunters are shielded from becoming equally familiar to the hunted.

The opening of the door at the rear of the room brought the waiting detectives to attention. Their forms stiffened to military erectness, their manner became watchfully alert.

"Good-morning," greeted Chief of Detectives Manning. The men saluted in return.

With quick, nervous strides the Chief made his way behind the long desk that ran half the length of the room, and took up a position of survey. His eyes, of hawklike penetration, swept the room while the desk lieutenant called the roll. The absentees having been entered on the blotter, the process of lining up the prisoners began without further ceremony.

A line of bedraggled, disheveled men and women, their eyes bleary from a night of wakefulness in narrow, ill-ventilated cells, shuffled into the room.

"Michael Noonan," droned the lieutenant.

An emaciated, weak-faced man, the wretchedness of his lot emphasized by the frayed clothing that hung in loose, broken lines from his form, stepped forward. A look of dull misery was stamped on his countenance, a hopeless disregard of the fate in store for him showed in his manner.

"Take a good look at this crook," commanded the Chief. "Never was pinched before. Caught with the goods on, however, by Wiggins and Wolf. Swiped lead pipe from a half-finished house."

The eyes of the detectives bent on the human wreck as he shrank back into line.

"Philip Pratt," called the lieutenant.

A young man, not more than thirty, whose sullen mien and restless eyes betrayed his occupation even before the Chief announced it, faced the massed battery of eyes. His thin lips curled into a disdainful smile as the Chief read his record from a slip of paper.

"Another old friend back," the head of the detective force commented. "Philip Pratt, alias Morse, alias Charlie Dodge, alias Toledo Phil. Confidence game. Did a term in Kintira, two short stretches up the river, and a long leg in Joliet."

The particular offense for which the prisoner was in the toils again was again described, and he, too, retired to temporary obscurity in the lines of unfortunates.

"Carrie Chase," came from the lieutenant.

Member of that frail sisterhood whose shame is no deeper than that of the civilization from which it springs, she carried herself with an easy dignity born of familiarity with her surroundings. The heavy lines of her face were drawn into an expression of grim defiance, but her eyes, dulled by long disipation, could not hide the dumb fear that lurked in her soul.

"Got away with a gent's super," the Chief drawled. He displayed a gold watch as if it held all the triumph of his years of pursuit in the underworld. "But we found the goods on her," he added smilingly.

Her career was part of the elemental knowledge of the assembled detectives and the Chief dismissed her quickly.

"The chances are she'll do a long stretch this trip," he commented.

Every condition of moral obliquity was represented in that shifting line of prisoners. There were youths, still in the formative period of their criminal careers, vying with the old-timers in the forced bravado of their demeanors. Others there were, shame-faced and sad, overcome with remorse and praying silently for the termination of the painful spectacle. Still others, old men and young men, regarding the proceedings with the indifference of disinterested spectators.

And there were women, too, from the hardened "badger queen," her hair and complexion as false as the jewels shimmering from her fingers and throat, to the trembling, weeping restaurant cashier accused of some petty defalcation. They represented types as varied as the emotions struggling within them, but as they stood side by side facing the expressionless masks, they seemed headed toward the same ultimate destiny. One after another they stepped forward for inspection until the line was exhausted. When the last of them had filed out of the room, the detectives did not remove their masks, as was the custom. Instead, they stood about in a high fever of expectancy. Quizzical glances were cast in the direction of the door leading to the cells. Suddenly the men bulked forward, as if inspired by a common impulse of curiosity. The swish of skirts, accompanied by the tread of masculine feet, sounded in the doorway. A woman's form, her head bent to her breast, her limbs unable to bear the weight of her frail body, was being half dragged, half carried into the room. All the life seemed to have drained out of her. Her hair hung disordered over her shoulders, her hands swung limply, like loose pendulums.

"Elinor Holcomb!" cried the lieutenant.

Donnelly and Carson, each with an arm under her shoulder, propped her sinking form.

"Lift your head," commanded the Chief.

The order fell on deaf ears. She seemed as one in the last agony of a mortal illness.

"Lift it for her," came in a voice of mingled sternness and compassion.

Donnelly's hand flew to her chin, tilting her face upward. For an instant she raised her heavy eyelids; then, recoiled as from a blow. The crowd of masked spectators floated before her eyes like hideous specters of a horrid dream. A low groan, like the last lament of a tortured soul, came from her lips. She seemed turned into a mass of jelly.

"Take her away," commanded the Chief, and the two detectives carried her out of the room.

"Accused of stealing the Missioner diamonds," was the curt explanation of her presence. In a harsh monotone, the Chief read the various Headquarters orders to the force, and the men not engaged on old work received their assignments of new cases. As abruptly as he had entered, the head of the Bureau left the room and retired to his private office. Then he summoned Donnelly and Carson.

"Take it pretty bad, eh?" he asked.

"Like all the swell ones when they're nabbed the first time," answered Carson.

"Had to call the doctor twice during the night, the matron tells me," informed Donnelly.

"Did she make any statement on the way to Headquarters?" inquired the Chief.

"Nothing but hysterics," Carson answered.

"And she's in no condition to be questioned now," added Donnelly.

"Anyone been inquiring for her?" the Chief suddenly snapped.

"Yes," flashed back Donnelly. His eyes lit with a crafty glow. "Some guy who says he's a doctor and engaged to marry her has been hanging around here all morning. Wants to know how he can get her out. Looks as if he might be mixed up in it, so I'm having him shadowed."

"Good!" commented the Chief. "If any lawyer calls, tell him she's in no condition to be seen. We don't want anyone to see her until we've questioned her."

It was late in the afternoon before Miss Holcomb was escorted into the interrogatorial chamber. She had fallen into a fitful slumber on the rude iron bed that projected from the wall of her cell, when Donnelly and Carson opened the grated door and called her out of her sleep. She gave a startled gasp when she saw them, a convulsive shudder racked her frame. A sudden influx of painful memories overwhelmed her with a pitiful sense of helplessness as she dragged herself to the office of the Chief.

With a weak show of courage, she eyed Manning resolutely, and then sank into a soft leather chair close to his desk. Donnelly and Carson occupied seats at her elbow.

"What did you do with those stones?" blurted the Chief.

Her lips framed a reply, but it died without utterance.

"Come, come!" he cried impatiently. "We don't want any acting here. I know you're only a tool in this matter. You've got the principal under arrest and I'm giving you a chance to save yourself. You turn State's evidence against him and I'll see that no harm comes to you. He's the fellow we want to land. Now tell me just what you did with the jewels."

In the midst of this outburst, a door opened silently and a sharp featured, smooth-shaven man of middle age entered and seated himself in an obscure corner of the room. His form seemed to merge into the shadow of the walls as he dropped noiselessly into his chair. Miss Holcomb did not see him enter. Her increasing terror gave her a furtive energy and she lifted her head with a sharp jerk.

"I didn't steal the jewels," she said.

"I had nothing to do with their disappearance."

The mocking laughter of three deep voices sounded in the room.

"Does it well!" chuckled Donnelly.

"Too bad she ain't an actress," joined Carson.

The Chief's heavy eyes narrowed on her as if he would read her innermost thoughts.

"There's no use trying to lie to me," he snarled. "I know who's got the diamonds. The man who hired you to steal them is locked up now. He says he didn't know they were stolen."

"Who says that?" she interrupted.

Donnelly and Carson nudged each other in boisterous glee.

"She wants to know who says it!" piped the former.

"Ain't she the slick one!" laughed his partner.

The Chief's face hardened until a menace seemed to lurk in every one of its deep cut lines.

"Now, you know who says it," he informed her. "I don't have to mention any names. It's simply a question of you going to jail or of sending him to jail. I don't take any stock in what he says. He can't tell me he didn't know you stole the jewels. I ain't as easy as all that! Now, I'm giving you a chance to make a full confession and save yourself. Will you confess?" His tone carried the weight of a threat, but her unresponsive mind was unable to grasp its significance. She stared blankly before her, as if her eyes were chained to some distant spot.

"Will you confess?" the Chief repeated with added menace.

As if roused from a long abstraction, she gazed appealingly at her tormentor.

"I have nothing to confess," she murmured weakly.

The Chief drew back in studied anger. His fist banged the desk as if the blow was meant to convey a sudden resolve.

"Very well!" he burst forth. "Go right ahead and be the goat if you want to. Look here, little girl, I was just kiddin' you when I said we had the principal under arrest," he said with a quick change of tactics. "You're the only one that's locked up. I don't believe there's anyone else mixed up in the case at all. I believe you did the job alone. If there's anyone behind you, you'll have to show me. There's only one thief involved, and that's you."

An expression, as of a hunted animal, crept into her face. She turned to the left and met the fixed stare of Donnelly. Averting her head, her eyes looked into those of Carson. Directly in front, close to her face, the cold gleam from the Chief's eyes fell on her. So she turned around, only to look into an impenetrable background of gloom, sinister and depressing.

"I haven't done anything," she pleaded. "I don't know who took Mrs. Missioner's diamonds." As if cut by a sudden thought, Miss Holcomb bent forward in her seat. "She can't believe I did it?" she moaned.

"You bet your life she believes you did it," the Chief announced. "And I know you did it. So what's the use of denying it?"

"I do deny it, I do deny it," she protested. "How can they think me capable of it?"

The Chief opened a drawer of his desk and brought forth the accusing diamond. He held it close to her face, permitting the rays to distribute themselves on her features.

"Pretty fine stone!" he commented.

"A peach of a shiner! Looked good to you, didn't it? Came so easy it was a shame to take it—eh? Now how did it get mixed up with your trinkets?"

"I don't know," she moaned.

The Chief turned from her wearily.

"You take her in hand, Donnelly," he said.

The detective bent over the woman, his face so close that she felt his warm breath against her cheeks.

"Don't try any nonsense down here," he snarled. "We got the goods on you, and we ain't going to stand any fooling. Now, where are those diamonds?"

She eyed him in mild protest.

"I don't know, sir," she murmured weakly.

Donnelly shoved his clenched fist under her chin. His face contorted into an expression of tigerish ferocity; he peered at her with an intensity that chilled her blood.

"You're a liar," he snapped. "You think you're a slick one, but you'll be sorry you was ever born if you don't cough up the goods. We know how to handle customers like you down here. We're used to 'em. We get 'em every day. Now, just save yourself a lot of trouble by telling the whereabouts of the diamonds."

"They ain't going to do you any good," interjected the Chief. "They don't wear diamonds where you're going to. The less trouble you give us, the less trouble we'll make for you. And we can make more trouble for you than you can make for us."

A look of such utter helplessness overspread her face that even the detectives realized the utter futility of their attack. She seemed as one under the influence of a torpifying drug. Her capability for new feelings had been crushed out of her by the crowded incidents following her arrest. All she felt was a dull pain of body and mind.

"Don't sit there like a white mummy," burst forth Donnelly. "Come, now," he added impatiently, "don't exhaust our patience; we haven't treated you roughly, but we know how to bring you out of your silence."

He seized her wrist, his clenched hand squeezing it until she uttered a sharp cry of pain.

"Are you going to answer my questions?" he blurted.

She sank back in the chair with a despairing moan. Her heavy eyelids dropped, a tremor contracted her brow, then her head fell limply to one side.

"I guess we won't gain anything by going any stronger with her today. Take her back!" commanded the Chief.

Donnelly and Carson shook her into consciousness. They steadied her as she dragged herself through the dark corridor and down two flights of narrow stairs to her cell.

When she was out of the room, the silent visitor came out of the obscurity of his corner and seated himself in the chair vacated by Miss Holcomb.

"What do you think of it, Britz?" asked Manning.

Detective Lieutenant Britz stared hard, as if trying to concentrate his thoughts. His keen face, screwed into an expression of uncertainty, contrasted sharply with the big heavy features of his superior. Side by side, the two men suggested the delicate surgeon's probe and the heavy blacksmith's sledge.

"It's a great mystery," Britz declared. "A great mystery," he repeated in a tone of deep conviction. "The most puzzling case that has ever come under my observation."

"Very well," the Chief drawled. "It's Donnelly and Carson's case, but you go out and solve it—you go out and get the goods."

Preparations for Shocks.

For most of the wrenches and jolts of life there are, happily, conditions which alleviate what would otherwise seem unbearable, conditions which soften and break the most cruel shocks. Death, for instance, the greatest shock of all, unless it is very sudden, seldom comes as an unbearable wrench, because weakness or suffering has prepared us for it.

AFTER MEASLES

Young Girl Was Badly Run Down—What She Did

Parents too often make the mistake of thinking that certain diseases of childhood, such as measles and whooping cough, are harmless.

Measles is very likely to weaken the kidneys and leave serious effects unless the system is built up with a reliable strength creator such as Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron preparation without oil.

Miss Marion Shaver, a young girl of Luzerne, N. Y., says: "I had measles several months ago and it left me in very bad condition, weak and rundown. After several months of this, I took Vinol to build me up. It has done me much good. I have gained both strength and weight and my appetite is good."

In all weakened and rundown conditions of the body, from any cause, Vinol should be used to create new blood and increase strength. We guarantee it to do this and will pay back your money if it does not. People's Drug Store, Gettysburg, Pa.
